Related fields also covered by these indexes include ethnic and area studies, politics, economics and women's studies.

This screen displays a list of all available databases in alphabetical order. If you would like to search within a specific database, simply select that database and a search screen will appear.

One of the most helpful links in the “FindArticles” section is the first option shown, A-Z of Online Journal Titles. If you are looking for a specific journal article and you have a citation, visit the A-Z of Online Journal Titles option first. You can easily look up any online journal the Online Library subscribes to within A-Z of Online Journal Titles and access specific articles.

Once you have accessed the A-Z of Online Journal Titles, simply enter the title of the journal into "Title" search field and hit enter or select the red "Go" option.

You can now access articles within this journal!

Different databases will have different formats, but generally all database journal listings will look similar to the screen above.

Many journals do not allow the most recently published articles to be digitized (this is known as a journal embargo). If you notice that articles within the last six months to a year are not available as full text, simply email ausill@argosy.edu to request this article through interlibrary loan.
